

Categorization

The following are the categorization tables that were developed for the numerous financial guarantee programs. As mentioned in the Methodology section, the tables are an attempt to capture the size, risk, age, and objectives of the programs in an understandable, comparative format.

The results are interesting. By far, the largest and oldest programs have stated objectives that address perceived market deficiencies in the area of housing. These programs have two or three times the outstanding loan portfolios of the next largest set of programs, those with objectives in education and agriculture. In addition, projected loans for next year are in an order of magnitude three to five times the values projected for the education and agriculture loans. The housing programs, not surprisingly, also have the greatest maximum liabilities, followed again by education and agriculture loans. However, the largest programs did not top the default risk table. In fact, many of the housing programs fell at the very bottom of this listing and most were below the average default rate of approximately 14.8%. Although not as discernibly grouped, the programs that tended to have higher default rates seemed to have objectives tied to small business and higher education. More striking perhaps was the fact that the loans with a higher risk of default seemed to be loans given to projects that had a higher susceptibility to general economic trends such as unemployment rates, inflation rates, and consumer spending.

There are a few points to remember when analyzing the charts.

- Any program for which the necessary information was unavailable is listed in the last table in each series.
- Programs that are new or that are being phased out may have dollar values of zero in certain cases.
- All Canadian dollar values have been converted into U.S. dollars (as explained in the Methodology section) for comparison.
- The maximum liability is calculated by multiplying total loans outstanding by the percentage guaranteed. This is the absolute maximum liability and is not meant to be perceived as a likely outcome for any program.
- Some of the programs have been through a number of iterations since their origination date, but are nevertheless the same program and have been listed as such.

*Percent guaranteed depends on size of the loan. For this maximum liability calculation, 90% was used because the average loan size is under $2,000,000.

†No direct loans have been made through the Guaranty and Indemnity Fund.

‡For this calculation, the average percent guaranteed value of 60% was used.

§Net of uncollected interest capitalized upon rescheduled, unamortized exposure fees, unamortized discounts, and an allowance for losses.

||The maximum amount of the loan that FHA will insure under this program is 90%. Therefore, this figure is the largest liability the agency faces.

This figure was only available as of the end of March 1995.
