If the ACA is upheld in its entirety, all else equal, we could expect annual health coverage costs for large group employers (both fully insured and self- funded) to:

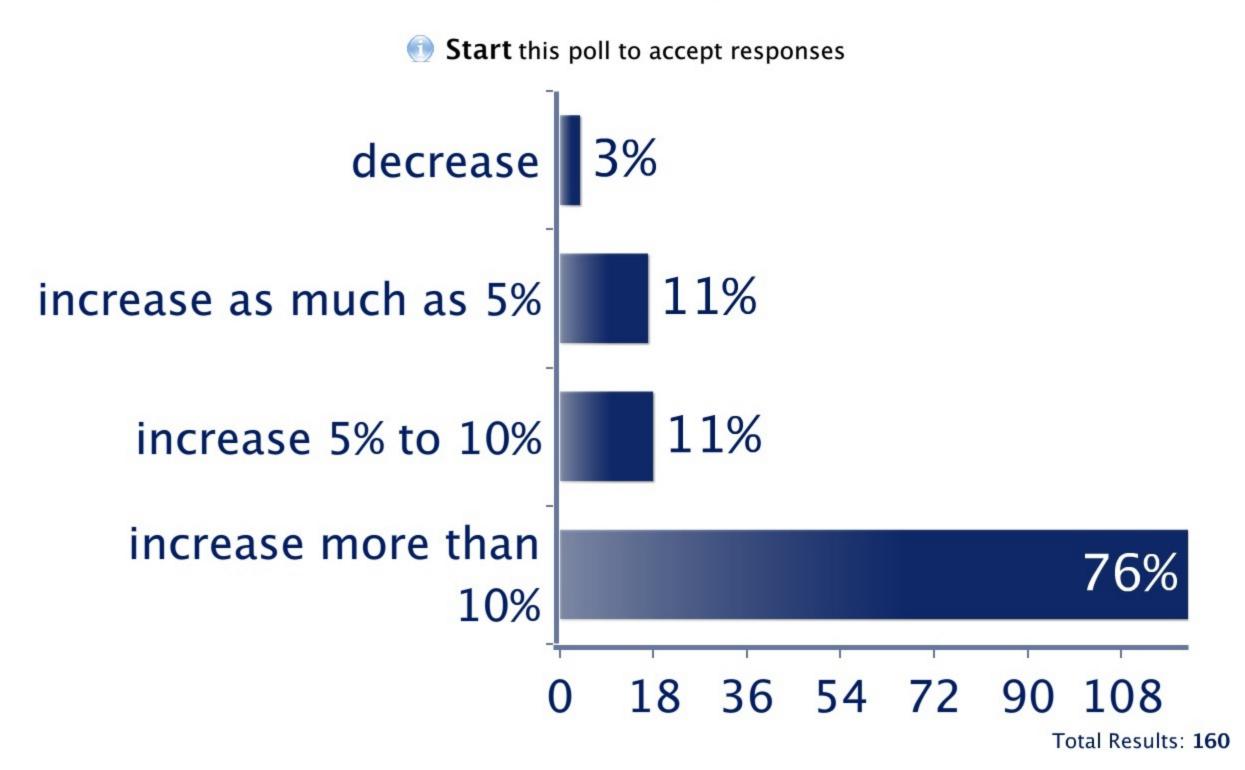

If the ACA is upheld in its entirety, annual health coverage costs for currently insurable individuals in the individual health insurance market will:

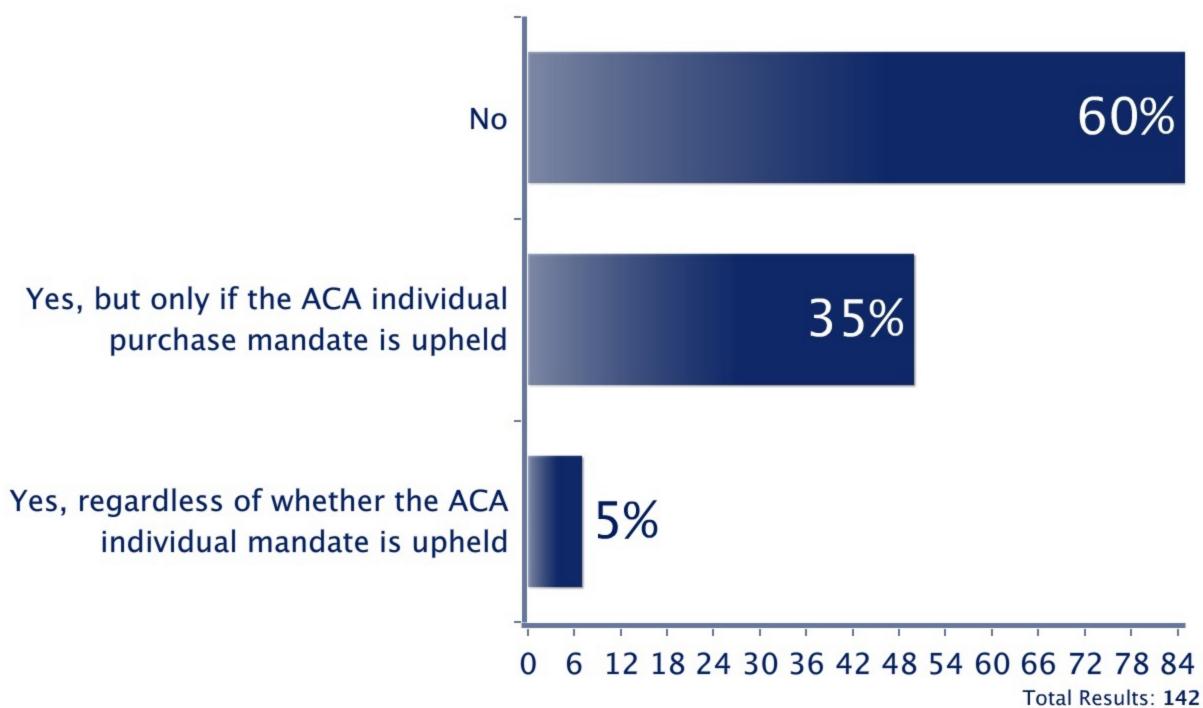

Total Results: 153

If the individual mandate is thrown out, but is severable from the rest of ACA (that is, all other provisions remain), annual health coverage costs for currently insurable individuals in the individual health insurance market will:

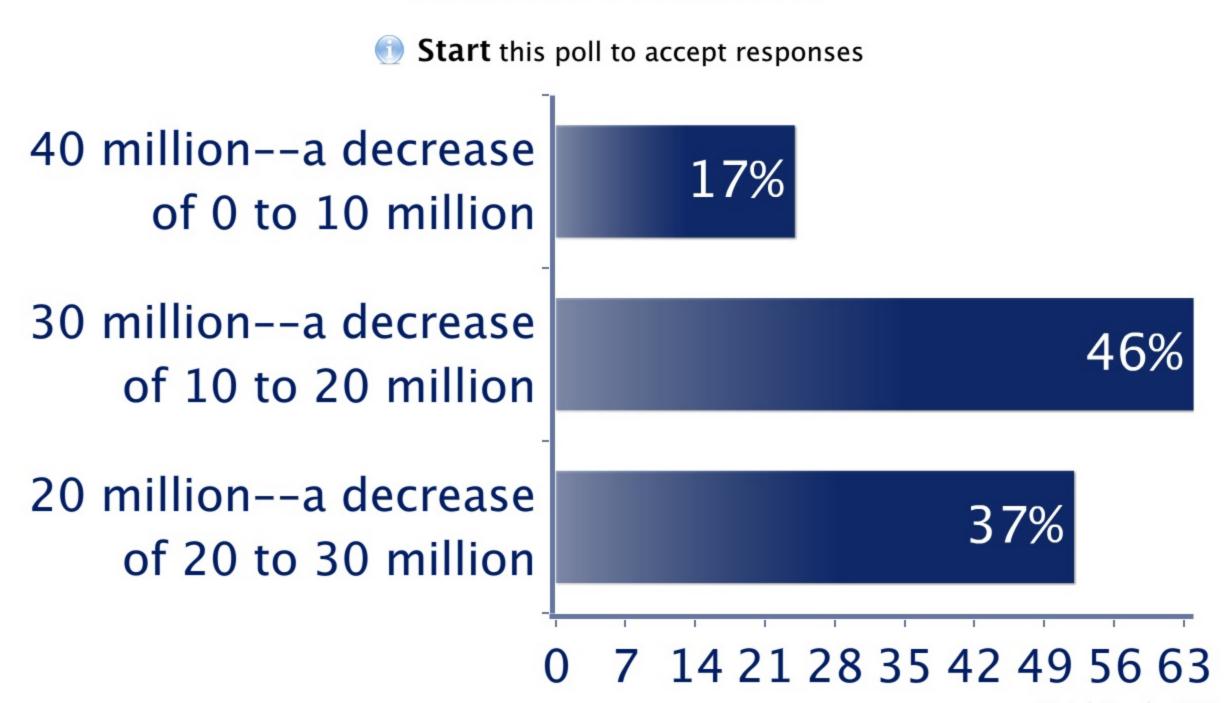

Will the state/federal exchanges reduce individual and small group fully insured health coverage costs compared with pre-exchange private market options?

If the ACA passes in entirety, by the year 2018, will the number of those without health coverage in the US decrease from the current level of approximately 50 million residents to:

Total Results: 140